

End the death penalty in Kansas because it...

... risks executing an innocent person from mistakes made during the investigation and prosecution to eyewitness misidentification and false confessions.

... costs more than a sentence of life without parole, and does not deter violent crime.

... is applied inconsistently, with evidence of discrimination based on race, income, and geography.

... fails families of murder victims by prolonging the pain and trauma through a lengthy trial and required appeals process.

Kansas already has in place an alternative to the death penalty, a sentence of life without parole. This lifelong confinement keeps Kansans safe from violent criminals without risking the harmful effects of the death penalty.

End the death penalty in Kansas because it...

... risks executing an innocent person from mistakes made during the investigation and prosecution to eyewitness misidentification and false confessions.

... costs more than a sentence of life without parole, and does not deter violent crime.

... is applied inconsistently, with evidence of discrimination based on race, income, and geography.

... fails families of murder victims by prolonging the pain and trauma through a lengthy trial and required appeals process.

Kansas already has in place an alternative to the death penalty, a sentence of life without parole. This lifelong confinement keeps Kansans safe from violent criminals without risking the harmful effects of the death penalty.

End the death penalty in Kansas because it...

... risks executing an innocent person from mistakes made during the investigation and prosecution to eyewitness misidentification and false confessions.

... costs more than a sentence of life without parole, and does not deter violent crime.

... is applied inconsistently, with evidence of discrimination based on race, income, and geography.

... fails families of murder victims by prolonging the pain and trauma through a lengthy trial and required appeals process.

Kansas already has in place an alternative to the death penalty, a sentence of life without parole. This lifelong confinement keeps Kansans safe from violent criminals without risking the harmful effects of the death penalty.

End the death penalty in Kansas because it...

... risks executing an innocent person from mistakes made during the investigation and prosecution to eyewitness misidentification and false confessions.

... costs more than a sentence of life without parole, and does not deter violent crime.

... is applied inconsistently, with evidence of discrimination based on race, income, and geography.

... fails families of murder victims by prolonging the pain and trauma through a lengthy trial and required appeals process.

Kansas already has in place an alternative to the death penalty, a sentence of life without parole. This lifelong confinement keeps Kansans safe from violent criminals without risking the harmful effects of the death penalty.