Kansas Abolitionists

Kansans are opposed to the death penalty for a variety of reasons. Some feel the practice is morally wrong while others feel that the system is simply too broken to continue. Abolitionists come from all points along the political spectrum, from a variety of backgrounds and from across the state of Kansas. Kansas Coalition Against the Death Penalty (KCADP) members want to repeal the death penalty and replace it with life without parole.

You are invited to KCADP's annual meeting and conference Nov. 2 in Manhattan, KS on the campus of Kansas State University. Join the Coalition and former Gov. John Carlin for an overview of abolition in Kansas. Multiple breakout sessions also included.
